

"I have seen the future and it works." - Lincoln Steffens

HOME

ARCHIVES

« FILM OF THE WEEK: STARTUP.COM | MAIN | THE PMARCA GUIDE TO STARTUPS, PART 4: THE ONLY THING THAT MATTERS »

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 3: "But I don't know any VCs!"

JUN 25, 2007

In my last post in this series, When the VCs say "no", I discussed what to do once you have been turned down for venture funding for the first time.

However, this presupposes you've been able to pitch VCs in the first place. What if you have a startup for which you'd like to raise venture funding, but you don't know any VCs?

I can certainly sympathize with this problem -- when I was in college working on Mosaic at the University of Illinois, the term "venture capital" might as well have been "klaatu barada nikto" for all I knew. I had never met a venture capitalist, no venture capitalist had ever talked to me, and I wouldn't have recognized one if I'd stumbled over his checkbook on the sidewalk. Without Jim Clark, I'm not at all certain I would have been able to raise money to start a company like Netscape, had it even occurred to me to start a company in the first place.

The starting point for raising money from VCs when you don't know any VCs is to realize that VCs work mostly through referrals -- they hear about a promising startup or entrepreneur from someone they have worked with before, like another entrepreneur, an executive or engineer at one of the startups they have funded, or an angel investor with whom they have previously co-invested.

The reason for this is simply the math: any individual VC can only fund a few companies per year, and for every one she funds, she probably meets with 15 or 20, and there are hundreds more that would like to meet with her that she doesn't possibly have time to meet with. She has to rely on her network to help her screen the hundreds down to 15 or 20, so she can spend her time finding the right one out of

Digg This Blog - Reddit This Blog - Delicio.us This Blog

ABOUT THIS BLOG

My name is Marc Andreessen. This is my blog.

You can send me email at pmarcablog (at) gmail (dot) com. Due to volume and other responsibilities I probably won't respond but I will try to at least read all messages.

SUBSCRIBE

Enter your email address to subscribe to this blog:

Subscribe

TOP POSTS

Rebuilding Hollywood in Silicon Valley's image

Building a state-of-the-art Emergency Room for Silicon Valley

Suicide by strike

Ning is now live with Open Social

Report from the front: Tonight's launch of Open Social

Open Social: screencast and screenshots

Open Social: a new universe of social applications all over the web

Serial entrepreneurs and today's Silicon Valley

OK, you're right, it IS a bubble

The web and mainstream consumer behavior in 2007

Social networking and the Geocities fallacy

The Pmarca Guide to Career Planning, part 3: Where to go and why

The Pmarca Guide to Career Planning, part 2: Skills and education

 Subscribe in an RSS or Atom reader

 MY YAHOO!

 Google

 netvibes

 Bloglines

NING SOCIAL NETWORK COUNT

169,556 social networks have been created on Ning to date.

Create your own social network on Ning -- free.

LINKROLL

» Sony CEO sees 'stalemate' in disc fight

If by stalemate you mean irrelevant because of Internet streaming and downloading, well then, yes...

» 24: The Unaired 1994 Pilot
You've got bomb schematics!

» Knocked Down
"...a poll which found that women expect a win by Hillary to create a positive change in peoples' attitudes toward women..." -- wanna bet?

» Notes from the Lounge: Care Bear Stare!
The Care Bear Stare! You see this a lot in business too.

» Palo Alto city council vote results
The homeless guy who sits outside Whole Foods every day got 659 votes!

» Execs, NBC roast AOL's Falco
He he, layoffs are funny.

the 15 or 20.

Therefore, submitting a business plan "over the transom", or unsolicited, to a venture firm is likely to amount to just as much as submitting a screenplay "over the transom" to a Hollywood talent agency -- that is, precisely nothing.

So the primary trick becomes getting yourself into a position where you're one of the 15 or 20 a particular venture capitalist is meeting with based on referrals from her network, not one of the hundreds of people who don't come recommended by anyone and whom she has no intention of meeting.

But before you think about doing that, the first order of business is to (paraphrasing for a family audience) "have your stuff together" -- create and develop your plan, your presentation, and your supporting materials so that when you do meet with a VC, you impress her right out of the gate as bringing her a fundable startup founded by someone who knows what he -- that's you -- is doing.

My recommendation is to read up on all the things you should do to put together a really effective business plan and presentation, and then pretend you have already been turned down once -- then go back to my last post and go through all the different things you should anticipate and fix before you actually do walk through the door.

One of the reason VCs only meet with startups through their networks is because too many of the hundreds of other startups that they could meet with come across as amateurish and uninformed, and therefore not fundable, when they do take meetings with them. So you have a big opportunity to cut through the noise by making a great first impression -- which requires really thinking things through ahead of time and doing all the hard work up front to really make your pitch and plan a masterpiece.

Working backwards from that, the best thing you can walk in with is a working product. Or, if you can't get to a working product without raising venture funding, then at least a beta or prototype of some form -- a web site that works but hasn't launched, or a software mockup with partial functionality, or something. And of course it's even better if you walk in with existing "traction" of some form -- customers, beta customers, some evidence of adoption by Internet users, whatever is appropriate for your particular startup.

With a working product that could be the foundation of a fundable startup, you have a much better chance of getting funded once you do get in the door. Back to my rule of thumb from the last post: when in doubt, work on the product.

The Pmarca Guide to Career Planning, part 1: Opportunity

Ning passes 100,000 social networks

Counterpoint: Ben Horowitz on micromanagement

The three kinds of platforms you meet on the Internet

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 9: How to hire a professional CEO

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 8: Hiring, managing, promoting, and firing executives
Luck and the entrepreneur, part 1: The four kinds of luck

Age and the entrepreneur, part 1: Some data
The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 7: Why a startup's initial business plan doesn't matter that much

HP buys my company Opsware for more than \$1.8 billion in cash

Eleven lessons learned about blogging, so far
The Pmarca Guide to Big Companies, part 2: Retaining great people

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 6: How much funding is too little? Too much?

Why Ning?

Now playing: Silicon Valley short attention span theater

CEO Crime & Punishment

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 5: The Moby Dick theory of big companies

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 4: The only thing that matters

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 3: "But I don't know any VCs!"

So you think you want to invest in a private equity fund

The Pmarca Guide to Big Companies, part 1: Turnaround!

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 2: When the VCs say "no"

The Pmarca Guide to Startups, part 1: Why not to do a startup

How to effortlessly inject your content into Facebook, using Ning

Top 10 science fiction novelists of the '00s -- so far

Analyzing the Facebook Platform, three weeks

» Bush hasn't called Musharraf over establishment of dictatorship
There's a shocker!

» "Giuliani has rebuffed all calls to disclose details about the clients and dealings of Giuliani Partners..."
Lets waterboard him and find out!

» GM Will Book \$39 Billion Charge

"GM said it will book a $39 billion third-quarter noncash charge from a write-down tied to tax credits it would have used in the event it was profitable." Yes, well I guess it won't be needing those...

» Bancroft Family Email Exchanges

How the 27-year-old opera singer ended up on the News Corp. board. You cannot make this stuff up.

» Bancrofts Bicker, Miss a Deadline, Lose News Corp. Board Choice

One last change to be hopeless and dysfunctional, and they seized it!

» Sony Soft Leather Carrying Case LCS-TWA/T
Yes, Sony is now selling twats.

» Interview of the Vice President by Mike Gallagher

Cheney: "When you're at the center of the bubble, lot of times you aren't aware of what's going on outside the bubble."

» Nomination of Mukasey Sent to Full Senate

Let it be recorded that Dianne Feinstein and Charles Schumer are de facto waterboarders.

» Hail, the Conquered Hero - Dick Cavett

An ancient has-been defends a racist a--hole!

» Suicide Bombing Makes Sick Sense in 'Halo 3'
It's really quite a good idea...

» How to be a tech blowhard
Be insane or oblivious, but not both...

» Peter White - I have your forty bucks

It's far more fun to sue people than figure out how to take their money...

» Charles Prince Resigns As Citi CEO, Chairman

Maybe these companies should stop appointing the long-time house attorney as CEO...

» How the New York Times exposed all articles from 1851-1922

Failing a working product and ideally customers or users, be sure to have as fleshed out a presentation as you possibly can -- including mockups, screenshots, market analyses, customer research such as interviews with real prospects, and the like.

Don't bother with a long detailed written business plan. Most VCs will either fund a startup based on a fleshed out Powerpoint presentation of about 20 slides, or they won't fund it at all. Corollary: any VC who requires a long detailed written business plan is probably not the right VC to be working with.

Next: qualify, qualify, qualify. Do extensive research on venture capitalists and find the ones who focus on the sector relevant to your startup. It is completely counterproductive to everyone involved for you to pitch a health care VC on a consumer Internet startup, or vice versa. Individual VCs are usually quite focused in the kinds of companies they are looking for, and identifying those VCs and screening out all the others is absolutely key.

Now, on to developing contacts:

The best way to develop contacts with VCs, in my opinion, is to work at a venture-backed startup, kick butt, get promoted, and network the whole way.

If you can't get hired by a venture-backed startup right now, work at a well-regarded large tech company that employs a lot of people like Google or Apple, gain experience, and then go to work at a venture-backed startup, kick butt, get promoted, and network the whole way.

And if you can't get hired by a well-regarded large tech company, go get a bachelor's or master's degree at a major research university from which well-regarded large tech companies regularly recruit, then work at a well-regarded large tech company that employs a lot of people like Google or Apple, gain experience, and then go to work at a venture-backed startup, kick butt, get promoted, and network the whole way.

I sound like I'm joking, but I'm completely serious -- this is the path taken by many venture-backed entrepreneurs I know.

Some alternate techniques that don't take quite as long:

If you're still in school, immediately transfer to, or plan on going to graduate school at, a large research university with well-known connections to the venture capital community, like Stanford or MIT.

Graduate students at Stanford are directly responsible for such companies as Sun, Cisco, Yahoo, and Google, so needless to say, Silicon Valley VCs are continually in

The truth about venture capitalists, Part 3

The truth about venture capitalists, Part 2

The truth about venture capitalists, Part 1

How to hire the best people you've ever worked with

Why there's no such thing as Web 2.0

The Pmarca Guide to Personal Productivity

Bubbles on the brain

ASK PMARCA!

New blog feature -- email me a question, and if I like it, I'll answer it on this blog.

Email me questions at pmarcablog \(at\) gmail \(dot\) comgmail(dot)com). Thank you!

PMARCA IS...

reveling in the Open Socialness of it all... 96 days ago

coming down from the marshmallow high from the smores at the Google campfire event 97 days ago

strongly considering becoming 24 97 days ago now 26. That's right, 26. What about it? 99 days ago

actually 29 -- didn't you know that? 100 days ago

kicking it after an intense week 109 days ago

becoming a huge fan of peter green, nearly 40 years after everyone else 119 days ago

forgetting that humor does not travel well across cultures 122 days ago

under quarantine orders from his doctor for another week 122 days ago

still wanting more sympathy, this time for getting finger X-rays and blood drawn 124 days ago

in a Room to Read board meeting \(via conference call\) 125 days ago

starting a third course of antibiotics 127 days ago

trying to kill a fever with blogging and mahler - may not be the best strategy 130 days ago

trying to kill a fever with spaghetti and "damages" 131 days ago

at home "still" recovering from the Mexico

This is way, way, way, way, way, way cool.

I am pmarcablog on del.icio.us

CATEGORIES

Ask Pmarca

Bono

Book of the Week

Books

Business

Economics

Film

Film of the Week

Finance

Gadgets

Housekeeping

Life Hacks

Mac

Mobile

Music of the Week

Ning

Opware

Paper of the Week

Programming

Quote of the Week

Startups

Technology

Windows

ARCHIVES

February 2008

January 2008

December 2007

November 2007

October 2007

September 2007

August 2007

July 2007

June 2007

ENTREPRENEURS

Aaron Swartz

Chris Pirillo

on the prowl on the Stanford engineering campus for the next Jerry Yang or Larry Page.

(In contrast, the University of Illinois, where I went to school, is mostly prowled by mutant cold-weather cows.)

Alternately, jump all over Y Combinator. This program, created by entrepreneur Paul Graham and his partners, funds early-stage startups in an organized program in Silicon Valley and Boston and then makes sure the good ones get in front of venture capitalists for follow-on funding. It's a great idea and a huge opportunity for the people who participate in it.

Read VC blogs -- read them all, and read them very very carefully. VCs who blog are doing entrepreneurs a huge service both in conveying highly useful information as well as frequently putting themselves out there to be contacted by entrepreneurs in various ways including email, comments, and even uploaded podcasts. Each VC is different in terms of how she wants to engage with people online, but by all means read as many VC blogs as you can and interact with as many of them as you can in appropriate ways.

See the list of VC bloggers on my home page, as well as on the home pages of various of those bloggers.

At the very least you will start to get a really good sense of which VCs who blog are interested in which kinds of companies.

At best, a VC blogger may encourage her readers to communicate with her in various ways, including soliciting email pitches in certain startup categories of interest to her.

Fred Wilson of Union Square Ventures has even gone so far as to encourage entrepreneurs to record and upload audio pitches for new ventures so he can listen to them on his iPod. I don't know if he's still doing that, but it's worth reading his blog and finding out.

Along those lines, some VCs are aggressive early adopters of new forms of communication and interaction -- current examples being Facebook and Twitter. Observationally, when a VC is exploring a new communication medium like Facebook or Twitter, she can be more interested in interacting with various people over that new medium than she might otherwise be. So, when such a new thing comes out -- like, hint hint, Facebook or Twitter -- jump all over it, see which VCs are using it, and interact with them that way -- sensibly, of course.

vacation from hell 131 days ago in a Stanford Hospital board meeting 133 days ago giving in to temptation and reading a book about the first OJ trial 134 days ago now obsessed with fx's "damages" 135 days ago looking for sympathy for this morning's finger surgery 135 days ago plowing through a huge backlog of email 135 days ago

follow me on Twitter

RECENT POSTS

I mean, really, who needs fiction?
Department of split-second golden ages, Henry Kravis edition
Silicon Valley after a Microsoft/Yahoo merger: a contrarian view
Inaugurating the New York Times Deathwatch
Now the SEC is just plain screwing with the magic
Department of making my brain hurt, Clinton/McCain edition
Yeah, I'm paying attention... what?
Fun with mark-to-make-believe, Morgan Stanley edition
It worked!
I'm pretty sure these guys pitched me on an angel investment last year
Does this guy look like he's telling the truth?
Flashback to the start of the 2007-2008 TV season
Astonishing Societe Generale transcripts emerge...
Great moments in journalism, Risk Magazine edition
Update on Societe Generale rogue trader Jerome Kerviel
If I'm ever found unconscious and not breathing, please call this person repeatedly before dialing 911
My jaw just hit the floor
The best way yet to measure the implosion of the TV and radio industries!
Oh boy! The FT liveblogs the Societe Generale conference call

Dan Bricklin
Dave Sifry
Dave Winer
Dick Costolo
Evan Williams
Jason Calacanis
Joel Spolsky
Joshua Schachter
Mark Cuban
Markus Frind
Matt Mullenweg
Naval Ravikant
Paul Graham
Steven Johnson
Thomas Hawk
Tom Evslin

VC'S

Brad Feld
Christopher Allen
David Cowan
David Feinleib
David Hornik
Fred Wilson
Going Private
Jeff Clavier
Jeff Nolan
Jeremy Liew
Joi Ito
Josh Kopelman
Peter Rip
Ryan McIntyre
Steve Jurvetson
Stu Phillips

TECHNOLOGY & BUSINESS

Adam Lashinsky
Alarm Clock
Andrew Chen
Ask the VC
Chris Anderson

More generally, it's a good idea for entrepreneurs who are looking for funding to blog -- about their startup, about interesting things going on, about their point of view. This puts an entrepreneur in the flow of conversation, which can lead to interaction with VCs through the normal medium of blogging. And, when a VC does decide to take a look at you and your company, she can read your blog to get a sense of who you are and how you think. It's another great opportunity to put forward a fantastic first impression.

Finally, if you are a programmer, I highly encourage you, if you have time, to create or contribute to a meaningful open source project. The open source movement is an amazing opportunity for programmers all over the world to not only build useful software that lots of people can use, but also build their own reputations completely apart from whatever day jobs they happen to have. Being able to email a VC and say, "I'm the creator of open source program X which has 50,000 users worldwide, and I want to tell you about my new startup" is a lot more effective than your normal pitch.

If you engage in a set of these techniques over time, you should be able to interact with at least a few VCs in ways that they find useful and that might lead to further conversations about funding, or even introductions to other VCs.

I'm personally hoping that the next Google comes out of a VC being sent an email pitch after the entrepreneur read that VC's blog. Then every VC on the planet will suddenly start blogging, overnight.

If none of those ideas work for you:

Your alternatives in reverse (declining) order of preference for funding are, in my view: angel funding, bootstrapping via consulting contracts or early customers, keeping your day job and working on your startup in your spare time, and credit card debt.

Angel funding -- funding from individuals who like to invest small amounts of money in early-stage startups, often before VCs come in -- can be a great way to go since good angels know good VCs and will be eager to introduce you to them so that your company goes on to be successful for the angel as well as for you.

This of course begs the question of how to raise angel money, which is another topic altogether!

I am not encouraging the other three alternatives -- bootstrapping, working on it part time, or credit card debt. Each has serious problems. But, it is easy to name

Boy, am I gonna miss this guy too
Ning in the wild: Magnolia neighborhood burglary social network in Seattle
Where did all those stinky LBO loans come from, anyway?
I am SO gonna miss this guy
Now it's getting fun...
Oh, and you thought the world ISN'T coming to an end?
Bill Clinton: 'Screw It, I'm Running For President'
Steve Blank's Secret History of Silicon Valley
New Tom Cruise Scientology recruiting video!
TV ratings and the writers' strike
21st century global trade wars, Honduran cotton sock edition
Wal-Mart nukes the magazine industry
The Secret History of Silicon Valley
It ain't radical, but it is a step...
The marginal American voter?
Failure Now An Option
Daddy, what was conservatism?
Astonishing, flabbergasting, mindblowing fact of the day, EMI edition
Ron Paul's greatest hits
Applied lessons in unpredictability, 2008 primary season edition
Yum! Patton Oswalt on the KFC Famous Bowl
He's leaving to spend more time with his marijuana bong
And now, a special message from "Mulholland Drive" director David Lynch
The one great thing about Falcon Northwest PCs
Education-centric Ning social networks proliferating like bunny rabbits
Porn, Ning, and the Internet
Do not, repeat not, buy a PC from Falcon Northwest
Blogging agenda for 2008
Newt!
What's that sound Wile E. Coyote makes as he's plummeting towards the ground?
The world is not so flat, God of Visas edition
Headline of the day, Los Angeles Times edition

Dan Farber
Dan Primack
Eric Savitz
Gizmodo
Jeff Matthews
Jeremy Wagstaff
Jessica Guynn
John Battelle
Jonathan Schwartz
Kevin Maney
Matt Marshall
Michael Arrington
Michael Parekh
O'Reilly Radar
Om Malik
Owen Thomas
Paul Buchheit
Paul Kedrosky
Paul Sloan
Rafat Ali
Rands
Robert Scoble
Roger Ehrenberg
Scott Rosenberg
Solution Watch
Spencer Ante
Startup Squad
Webware

NING-ERS

Brian McCallister
David Sklar
Diego Doval
Fabricio Zuardi
Gina Bianchini
Jon Aquino
Kyle Ford
Martin Traverso
Paul Lloyd
Phil McCluskey
Thomas Dudziak

INTERESTING WRITERS

highly successful entrepreneurs who have followed each of those paths, so they are worth noting.

Closing link:

Finally, be sure to read this page on Sequoia Capital's web site.

Sequoia is one of the very best venture firms in the world, and has funded many companies that you have heard of including Oracle, Apple, Yahoo, and Google.

On that page, Sequoia does entrepreneurs everywhere a huge service by first listing the criteria that they look for in a startup, then the recommended structure for your pitch presentation, and then finally actually asks for pitches "over the transom".

I have not done a thorough review of other VC web sites to see who else is being this open, but for Sequoia to be offering this to the world at large is a huge opportunity for the right startup. Don't let it pass by.

[Editorial note: This will be the last VC-related post in this series for a while. From now on I plan to focus much more on how to make a startup successful.]

Email this • Digg This! (4 Diggs) • Submit to Reddit • Share on Facebook • Save to del.icio.us (95 saves, tagged: startup entrepreneurship vc)

Numbers numbers numbers, film industry edition

Fascism watch, "I wasn't necessarily referring to genocide" edition

Pursuing the dream but ahead of his time, personal broadcasting edition

Innovation in law enforcement, topless woman edition

I've finally found my future ex-drug habit

Headline of the day, killer tiger edition

Great moments in predicting the future, television edition

Applied note-taking taken to a whole new level

Memo to Hollywood PR people: I'm available!

When non-technologists write about technology

Why did Albert Einstein hate freedom?

Good news, bad news

Where can I buy one of THESE?

Look at how far we've come!

One scenario for the great Hollywood strike(s) of 2007-2008

Drive

BEST. MOVIE. TRAILER. EVER.

From the I Clearly Did Not Have Enough Fun In College Department

Bing!

The trouble with stock buybacks as indicators of low stock prices

The authorities are on the case!

Sweep out some jail cells, new inmates are on their way

That's what I'm talking about

Modern Journalism Tackling the Big Issues of Our Time Department

Quote of the week, bonus edition: Jack Warner on standpatters

Quote of the week: Marcus Loew on ambition and success

Checking in on the progress towards Artificial Intelligence

Two perspectives on immigration, illegal and otherwise

INTERESTING WRITERS

2 Blowhards

Alex Ross

Becker-Posner

Bob Park

Brad DeLong

Charlie Stross

Daniel Davies

Daniel Drezner

David Brin

Ed Felten

Gina Trapani

Gretchen Rubin

James Fallows

Jeff Matthews

Jeff Stein

John Scalzi

Ken Levine

Kids Prefer Cheese

Laura Rozen

Marginal Revolution

Megan McArdle

Megan Non-McArdle

Merlin Mann

Michael Mandel

Nassim Taleb

Nielsen Haydens

Rich Karlgaard

Robin Hanson

Seth Roberts

Spencer Ackerman

Thomas Barnett

Tim Ferriss

Tim Goodman

GUILTY PLEASURES

Ask Rosie

Awful Plastic Surgery

Barbra Streisand

Fake Steve Jobs

I Don't Like You In That Way

Overheard in New York

The Daily WTF

